Introducing the College Board National Recognition Programs

Starting in fall 2019, if you take the PSAT/NMSQT and you’re African American, Hispanic American or Latinx, Indigenous, attend school in a rural area, or are from a small town, you may be invited to apply for academic recognition as part of the College Board National Recognition Programs*.

Benefits
The College Board National Recognition Programs are academic honors that can be included on college applications. It’s not a scholarship, but colleges use it to identify academically exceptional students.

Who’s Invited to Apply
The College Board reaches out to students who:

- Take the PSAT/NMSQT® in October of their junior year
- Are African American, Hispanic American or Latinx, or Indigenous
- Live in a rural area, as indicated by their home zip code
- Achieve the minimum requested PSAT/NMSQT scores (qualifying levels may vary by state each year)
- Earn a cumulative GPA of 3.5 or higher by the middle of their junior year

Visit psat.org/recognition for more information.

*The College Board’s National Recognition Programs are neither affiliated with nor endorsed by National Merit Scholarship Corporation or the National Merit Scholarship Program.

OUR PARTNERS
We’re working with four of our strategic partners to distribute these honors. Learn more about our partners and the scholarships they offer at psat.org/scholarships.
